10: I can plan, draft, edit and publish a diary account, writing in the style of a character

Dear diary,

Today was a terrible day (like everyday). Today, my dad woke me up by screaming in my ear and hitting a pan with a wooden spoon. For breakfast I had a single porridge-granite seed. It was disgusting but atleast it was something. Then I put on my Nike air maxes (which I stole from some pathetic loser) had to be honest I saw a glimpse of fear in his eyes which made me feel bad.

When I went out of the house, I started to kick around leaves. It felt amazing. Then I realised I can't kick leaves it's for little kids not people like me (well atleast that's what my dad says). I was staring at that point.

I was walking to Burgess Woods and I saw a family walking. They looked happy. I didn't look fake either. They were truly happy. They had three, each one laughing. I remembered before my mum left. Our family was like that before it got broken. Anyway carried on

At school, I saw a small kid. I took my anger out on him, stealing his crisps and a bunch more. It wasn't much but atleast it was something. With Conchita in my heart, I went home. Then I ran up the stairs silently and came straight into my room. I sat down and started writing this. I am going to sleep now, hoping that tomorrow is a new day.

✓ Simply wonderful! Evie! You have shown empathy with Hopper and written expertly from his perspective.
